FAST EXPRESS LEAVES TRACK

Western Maryland's Pride Train Jumps the Rails while Coming Down Mountain to Gettysburg. All but Two Cars off.

Running late and coming down at the mountain at a speed calculated to make up lost time, the express from Pittsburgh to Baltimore, due in Gettysburg at 5:40 jumped the track near Gladhills Station shortly after five o'clock this morning. All but two of the cars left the rails. They stayed upright and no one was hurt.

Whether a defective road bed, track, or truck caused the wreck is not known and no statement has been given out by the railroad people. The railroad, for many miles lies along the side of the mountain with a steep incline on the one side and a sheer drop on the other. Fortunately the train left the rails at Donohue Cut and a horrible calamity which would doubtless have occurred at almost any other place on the mountain was averted.

The train left Highfield fourteen minutes late. It carried a through express car from Pittsburgh to Philadelphia which is due to be transferred at Gettysburg to the Reading, leaving here at 5:55. The train is sent through here mainly for the purpose of effecting this connection and it is a matter of the greatest importance to railroaders to get here on time in order to allow the transfer of the car which takes some minutes.

It is one of the twin express trains of the road and getting through on time for the sake of passengers as well as the express is a matter of great pride to the Western Maryland. Listed at a faster schedule than any other train, it travels at exceptional speed. Coupled with this regular schedule at the time of the derailment this morning, was the fact that they were behind time, and the trip down the mountain was being run, mile after mile, at great speed.

Suddenly the heavy driving wheels of the engine left the rails about a quarter of a mile east of Gladhills and went bumping over the ties, tearing up the road bed as they went. The tender followed and a few feet farther the combination car jumped the rails. Two express cars followed and before the engineer could bring the train to a stop the front truck of one of the day coaches was also off. Puffing and snorting the big engine finally came to a standstill. Only the sleeping cars had stayed on the track.

Thrown about the cars as the trucks went bumping over the ties, passengers were badly shaken up and a scene of general confusion prevailed until they found that all danger was at an end. In the light of the early morning those who had been riding in the day coaches had been able to see the dire possibilities of an accident as they came over the mountain and gazed down the steep drop at the right hand side where, at a number of places, a train jumping the rails would be thrown for a hundred or more feet.

General alarm was manifested on all sides and it was some minutes before the confusion was abated. Those who were in the sleepers were roused from their slumbers as the emergency brakes were applied and the train brought to a sudden stop. While some of the passengers were slightly bruised by being tossed about it is not thought that any injuries are more than trivial.

For two or three hundred yards the track is badly torn up where the heavy train went crashing along, cutting over the ties and at the side of the track. A wrecking crew was at once summoned from Hagerstown and among the first things done was the removal of the two sleepers back to Highfield. The fact that the road, at the place of the accident, has only a single track added greatly to the difficulty of clearing up the trouble promptly and all trains were delayed.

EDDIE PLANK IS WHITEWASH KING

Holds the Record for Shut-outs in the American League. Few Have Passed the Half Century Figure. Walsh is Second.

Should Christy Mathewson, of the Giants, and Eddie Plank, of the Athletics, face each other in another world's series contest next fall the spectators fortunate enough to witness this encounter would be seeing a battle between the greatest whitewash spillers in the National and American Leagues says the Philadelphia Record.

Mathewson has for several years been the kalsomine king of the senior league, but it was not until May 28 of this year that Plank's friends had a right to announce that the veteran left-hander had to his credit more shut-outs than any other finger in the junior organization.

When the season started Ed Walsh, of the White Sox, possessed the honor now owned by Plank, of most frequently keeping his adversaries away from the scoring station. The West-erner had used the brush 56 times, the Easterner 55. Jimmy Callahan did not give Walsh a chance to start a game until July 5, and by that time Plank had pitched three shut-outs and since then another. Walsh, in his second trip out, came through with a "Chicago" victory over the Yankees, but he will have to pitch another brace of shut-outs before he can catch up with Gettysburg's best-known graduate in the important matter of spilling whitewash. Plank has denied his opponents runs in 59 controversies, Walsh in 57.

Walter Johnson on July 3 of this year got into the Plank-Walsh class and by the half-century post in whitewashing. At the end of the campaign, of 1913 he had to his credit 45 kalsominings. By May 29 the Idaho Phenom had fed his opponents on hen fruit four more times, but he had to wait until he could produce that fiftieth whitewashing, doing so July 3 against Boston.

Plank, Walsh and Johnson are not in much danger of having any more associates in their tight little whitewash society for many years to come. Only three other American League pitchers—"Chief" Bender and Jack Coombs, of Philadelphia, and Joe Wood, of Boston—have succeeded in keeping their opponents away from the plate in 25 or more games. Bender has shut out his rivals 33 times, Coombs 28 times and Wood 25 times.

The response of the lodges throughout the county has been very gratifying. Arendtsville, Littlestown, New Oxford, Cashtown and Gettysburg are among the places which expect to send large delegations.

FEARS HITCH IN SALTILLO

Amnesty May Block Transfer of Government to Rebels.

PEACE DELEGATES MEET

General Villa to Join General Carranza in Triumphal Entry Into Mexico City.

Washington, July 28.—Assembling of the conference at Saltillo to arrange for the transfer of administrations in Mexico City anxiously was awaited here.

A hitch over Carranza's attitude towards the question of amnesty for his enemies appeared as a possibility. Nevertheless, Washington officials clung to the hope that a middle ground might be reached for peaceful adjustment of the problem.

Advices from Tampico indicated the Constitutional leader was not disposed formally to grant amnesty prior to his occupation of Mexico City.

People in the territory once controlled by Huerta object to that policy, urging the new provisional president not to turn over the government until he has obtained from the Constitutional leader the proper guarantees, and Carranza has received many offers of support in case Carranza continues to insist upon surrender without conditions.

Reginaldo Cepeda, one of Carranza's envoys, was to confer with Carranza at Tampico, while the other member of the peace commission, General Lauro Villar and Judge David Gutierrez Allende, were to start for Saltillo. General Villar, it was believed, would be entirely acceptable to the Constitutionalists because of his clean military record. Judge Allende has had no recent part in Mexican politics and he is not connected with any political party.

President Carranza, it was learned, appointed Salvador Urbina, minister of justice, as a member of the peace commission.

Villa to Join March to Mexico City.
Chihuahua City, Mex., July 28.—A belated telegram from General Carranza at Victoria Tamauilipas, received by General Villar, urged him to view all issues from a broad basis of patriotism and join in the triumphal entry into Mexico City.

In the message General Carranza for the first time in months unburdened from his usual formal attitude and congratulated General Villar on his many military successes.

It was distinctly friendlier in tone than any communication received by Villar from his chief since he was congratulated on the capture of Ojinaga in the early months of the campaign.

General Villar replied to the message in the same tone, expressing favorable wishes for Carranza's administration as president of Mexico and giving assurances that he would be in Mexico City with the rest of the revolutionary army.

In addition he asked leave not to be instructed to extend quarter to Generals Orozco, Carranza or any other commanders of "Colorados" whom his army may encounter on its way toward the capital. He expressed the sentiment that these enemies of the republic had best be eliminated beyond question, thus freeing Mexico from an insatiably hostile and blood-thirsty element.

SCHMIDT ASKS NEW TRIAL

Slayer of Anna Ammiller Will Contend She Died of Operation.

New York, July 28.—Hans Schmidt, one time rector of St. Joseph's church, under death sentence for the murder of Anna Ammiller, whose body he dismembered and cast into the Hudson river, formally applied for a new trial. In an affidavit filed with the district attorney Schmidt's counsel asserts that the girl was not murdered, but died after an operation, and that Schmidt cut up the body to prevent a scandal, and to protect the surgeon who performed the operation. Arguments on the application will be heard on Oct. 5, before Judge Vernon M. Davis.

Casting aside all pretense of insanity, Schmidt made his plea through his lawyer, Alphonse G. Koelbe. At Schmidt's two trials an insanity defense was offered.

MICHAEL J. RYAN.

Appeals For Money to Arm "Defenseless People of Ireland."

ASKS FOR $300,000 TO ARM NATIONALISTS

Michael J. Ryan Issues Appeal to Americans.

New York, July 28.—Michael J. Ryan, of Philadelphia, national president of the United Irish League of America, has sent out an appeal for $300,000 to be used to purchase arms for "the defenseless people of Ireland."

Mr. Ryan makes this appeal at the request of John E. Redmond, chairman of the Irish parliamentary party and of the Irish National Volunteers.

He wants 100 Americans to contribute $300 each and 1000 Americans to contribute $100 each. This will make a total of $300,000. He asks that the contributions be sent to Thomas B. Fitzpatrick, national treasurer of the United Irish League, Boston, or direct to Mr. Redmond, house of commons, London. Mr. Ryan starts the fund himself by giving $1000.

In his appeal Mr. Ryan says: "John Redmond, chairman of the Irish Parliamentary party, appeals to Americans of Irish birth and blood to arm the defenseless people of Ireland. All sincere men had hoped that it would not be necessary to employ force; but we now see the army arrayed against the law, massacring those who stand for respect to the will of the majority and constituted authority."

"For years 'gun running' by the so-called Unionists of a part of Ulster has been permitted without obstruction. If a small minority of the people have the right to arm themselves, it ought not to be denied the overwhelming majority, such as the Nationalists of Ireland are. It is, however, useless to debate. Speedy action is now required by all who profess sympathy with this cause of human liberty."

TRUST BILL VOTE IN SENATE

Cummins Amendment to Trade Commission Measure Adopted, 40 to 13.

Washington, July 28.—By a vote of 40 to 13, in which party lines were disregarded, the senate adopted the first amendment to the federal trade commission bill, the first of three bills in the administration's trust program. Seven Republicans voted for the amendment and six Democrats voted against it.

The amendment was one drawn by Senator Cummins, Progressive Republican, of Iowa, and provides that no finding or order on the part of the federal trade commission shall be used as evidence in any prosecution under the Sherman anti-trust law. This is made to draw a clear line between the regulation of business by the commission and the punishment of trusts under the Sherman law. The amendment had been accepted by the interstate commerce committee.

Serbia Reconsiders Reply to Ultimatum.

EUROPEAN CRISIS IN BRIEF

Serbia's dream of a port on the Adriatic.

Austria-Hungary's part in sheltering this dream when it seemed near realization in the late Balkan war.

The Servians' ancient hate for Austria.

POSSIBILITIES.

If Russia aids Serbia, Germany and Italy would join forces with Austria, as parties to the Triple Alliance.

Then as other members of the Triple Entente, France and England would have to aid Russia.

Thus, a war with the six great powers of Europe arrayed against each other, might be witnessed.

Bulgaria, Turkey and Greece might be expected to support Serbia.

London, July 28.—Lack of confirmation of the early report of a hostile encounter on the Danube between Servian and Austrian troops, and Sir Edward Grey's efforts to obtain the consent of the leading European nations to mediation, led to a belief in the possibility of avoiding armed conflict between the European nations.

The governments of France and Italy have accepted the proposal of Sir Edward Grey, the British foreign secretary, that a conference be called with the object of finding a solution of the Austro-Servian situation.

Sir Edward Grey invited the governments of Austria-Hungary, Serbia and Russia to suspend operations pending the result of his proposed conference, which would be held in London. His suggestion was that the French, German and Italian ambassadors in London should confer with him in the endeavor to find a means of solving the present difficulties.

Sir Edward Grey, in announcing in the house of commons the steps to be taken to bring about mediation, said: "I understand that the German government is favorable to mediation in principle as well as Russia and Austria, but to our particular proposal to apply that principle by means of a conference the German government has not yet replied."

Sir Edward concluded by expressing the opinion that the failure of these efforts to bring about a settlement would lead to "the greatest catastrophe which could befall the concert of Europe, and its consequences would be incalculable."

Another factor in favor of a peaceful arrangement was made by Edmund C. Winger, burgess; Judge W. Rush Gillan, and State Senator John W. Hoke.

An address by Major M. H. Gherst, of Reading, Pa., in which he told of the failure of the union forces to arrive in time to prevent the burning of the town, was the feature of the forenoon exercises.

Scores of the older citizens were present and a chorus sang old songs. An automobile parade, which followed, with George H. Miller as chief marshal, was the feature.

WEEK OF REUNIONS AT CHAMBERSBURG

Historic Town Celebrates 150th Anniversary.

Chambersburg, Pa., July 28.—Chambersburg opened her gates for the throngs that crowded through them to join in the week's celebration of the 150th anniversary of the founding of the town by Benjamin Chambers and the fiftieth anniversary of its destruction by the Confederates.

On the court house plaza formal addresses of welcome were made by Edmund C. Winger, burgess; Judge W. Rush Gillan, and State Senator John W. Hoke.

An address by Major M. H. Gherst, of Reading, Pa., in which he told of the failure of the union forces to arrive in time to prevent the burning of the town, was the feature of the forenoon exercises.

WASHING FOR SUFFRAGE.

Women Hope to Raise $50,000 Fund in Self Denial Campaign.

With the opening of their "suffrage shop" Chicago women who are trying to raise money for the "cause" inaugurated one of the many means by which they hope to accumulate $50,000. The money must be in hand by Aug. 15, which has been designated as "self denial day." The fund is to be used in suffrage campaigns in North Dakota, South Dakota, Ohio, Missouri, Nevada, Montana and Nebraska. Some of the women are practicing self denial and doing work to which they are far from accustomed in order to accomplish their end.

Mrs. Mabelle Tindolph and Mrs. Marion Hitt, both socially prominent, decided to do their own washing and turn over what money they save to the "cause" fund.

The women have thought of many ways to earn money for the campaign fund. Mrs. Mary Chandler, who lives near the lake shore, turned her home into a bathing house for girls.

FACING DEATH TO THRILLING DAYS

American Press Association
Man With Villa Took Life
In His Hands.

By JAMES WARE.

[Mr. Ware, a photographer of the American Press Association, accompanied General Villa's rebel army in Mexico from Saltillo. In a preceding article he devoted himself to the rebel chief, and now he relates various experiences, incidents and impressions.]

IT'S all very well to laugh about it when you get back, but when you are some fifteen hundred miles in the interior of a country like Mexico and there's trouble and danger on every side you are not much in the humor. I know I was not. To be quite candid, the thought uppermost in my mind every night when I went to "bed" was, "Will I wake up to be tortured to death or will I wake up at all?" And there was a very good reason for these gloomy apprehensions. Here was I, a lone American, with Villa's army far away from any zone of protection and without news of the outside world. Suppose word arrived that the American soldiers were advancing from Vera Cruz. Imagine what would happen to me! I knew it would be all off in such an event—I'd never see the white lights of Broadway again. My one consolation was the knowledge that I was reasonably safe barring outward developments, as my government was favoring the cause of the Constitutionalists.

I say reasonably safe advisedly, for during my stay in the turbulent republic the fact that it explained my real status was brought home to me more than once. My first exposure to grave peril came with the burning of Nuevo Laredo, Mexico, on the border. I arrived there when the federalists were dynamiting and burning the city. American sharpshooters were picking off the Mexicans who were trying to blow up the international bridge. I wanted to cross that bridge to take pictures, but Colonel Crane warned me not to. "It looks like sure death if you do," he said. Finally he yielded, permitting me to make the passage at my own risk.

Thought His Day Had Come.

Arrived on the Mexican side, I was met by fifteen mounted Mexicans much the worse for liquor confiscated in the raid on Nuevo Laredo. They were conducting themselves in a boisterous and gleeful manner, shooting off guns in the air in celebration of the federal evacuation. They immediately surrounded me, regarding me, dressed as I was in an American army shirt and hat, as an American soldier. It was a mighty uncomfortable moment. Yet to my surprise they allowed me to enter the city when I made known my business. But an adventure was in store for me. It came when I went to the car shops about three miles out to take pictures of the destruction that had been wrought there.

As I was approaching one of the crude fortifications a Mexican scouting party called upon me to give the countersign. I didn't know what they meant. Standing there looking down the nose of a rusted old Mauser and ignorant of what was expected of me, I felt I was in for it good and proper. Sure enough I was. After failing to explain my mission I was escorted at the point of a gun to the headquarters and prison. On the way I asked my captor by making signs to pose for the camera. He readily consented.

At the prison good luck favored me. There I met Captain Palaz, who made amends for my arrest. He permitted me to photograph the prisoners and officers in the prison yard, presented me with a box of his best cigars and took me riding in his automobile. He could understand English, but could not speak it. Eventually we became excellent friends, and he escorted me with his company on the journey to Monterey.

opportunity to take a flashlight of a group of officers assembled in a cafe. While I was getting ready to make the picture a surly young captain under Gonzales did all he could to spoil it and show his disgust for the Americans. Two other Americans were with me and when they saw what I was about to do they came to my aid. "We're going to beat it," they said. "You're flirting with bullets."

Later one of the officers asked me to drink a glass of champagne. I would not have dared refuse, as to do that would in Mexican eyes be regarded as an unpardonable affront.

I had my wits about me and drank to the success of the Constitutional cause, thereby relieving an awkward situation. Yet even after this stroke of diplomacy my surly friend made some remarks in Spanish the nature of which I did not understand, though I knew they were not complimentary.

Villa's Resourcefulness.

The most interesting incident and one not heretofore told so far as I know was that of how the Constitu-

WOUNDED FEDERAL HIL.

Constitutionalists captured Paredon and why the federalists evacuated Saltillo. When Villa's scouts were marching on to Saltillo the federalists met them at Paredon, fifteen miles south, with one of their heaviest armies in that vicinity. After the attack Villa discovered that he was outnumbered by thousands and foresaw defeat unless he could resort to masterful measures. After the fight had progressed an hour or two he summoned seventy-five of his mounted soldiers and ordered them to cut down a goodly quantity of mesquite trees, which grow in bush form. These he ordered tied to the horses and started his men riding through desert vantage points. The purpose of this was to create the impression in the federal ranks by raising great clouds of dust that he was being heavily re-enforced, and in this he was highly successful.

Outwitted and apprehensive, the federalists thereupon retreated to Saltillo and reported the coming of Villa's troops with re-enforcements. In their haste to evacuate the city they had no time to set off mines to accomplish his destruction, as had been their purpose. But they did burn the large Casino, the finest in Mexico.

The result of this clever plan of the resourceful Villa was that his forces walked unmolested into Saltillo, and the rebel commander split his sides laughing over the success of his ruse.

Ate by His Wit.

At Torreon I had an amusing experience in satisfying the wants of the inner man. I was unable to make the Mexican waiter understand by word of mouth what I wished to eat, so I resorted to my pencil and drew a picture of a hen laying an egg and another picture of a hog. He laughed heartily and understood that I wanted ham and eggs. When these were set before me they were about as big as a silver dollar and cost me 60 cents American money.

On my first trip to Zacatecas, before the bloodiest battle of the revolution, I had a spectacular ride on a handcar to my destination. This handcar was propelled by four persons who had been directed by General Villa to take me wherever I wished to go. We started out at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, riding all night through mountains infested with wild animals and all the next day. The handcar had an acetylene lamp for a headlight, and frequently during the slow and tiresome journey I would spy the blazing green eyes of a wolf as the beast crouched on the tracks directly in our path, fascinated by the glare of the light. More than once I thought we should hit one of the animals, but they always scampered off into the blackness of the night just in time to avoid being run down. I did some great shooting that night, and from relays that followed my shots many of them took effect.

A Live One Among the Dead.

At Zacatecas, following the battle, I witnessed an uncanny incident. A cartload of dead soldiers stood within a hundred yards of General Villa's car, and no notice seemed to be paid to it. When General Villa's attention was called to this he asked why the bodies had not been burned. He was told there was no oil available for the purpose. He saw that it was supplied forthwith, and then it was that the incident to which I have referred occurred.

At the lighting of the first torch one of the "corpses," a wounded federal soldier, rose up among the dead in silent protest. He had been hiding among the bodies in the hope of escaping under cover of night. I suspect he was turned over to the mercy officer, that kindly individual whose function it is to dispose of the suffering.

After ten days in this place of horrors the split came between Villa and Carranza, and Villa ordered his entire army to return to Torreon.

On Colonel Fierro's Train.

Coming home, after we arrived at Torreon following the fight at Zacatecas, we found no trains were leaving for the border. There had been cloudbursts, and the roads had been washed out for eighteen days. After camping in the railroad yard for four days I noticed a freight train was being made up to carry Colonel Fierro, the man said to have killed Benton, the Englishman, and who had been wounded at Zacatecas. This train was bound for Juarez. I got aboard without permission, as I wanted to beat my rivals to the border with my pictures. This I did, arriving forty-eight hours before they appeared. En route at 8 o'clock the first night Colonel Fierro left his train at Santa Rosalia, despite his wound, a painful one in the thigh, to visit friends. He did not return until 2 p. m. the following day, and in the meantime we almost starved.

Fierro speaks English, and when we were within 150 miles of the border he said to me, pointing west to the mountains, "There's where my gold mines are; guess I'll stop the train and have a look at them." Suffering though he was, he rode his horse the distance, five miles at least. That's the Mexican of it; they won't give in even when they're dying. I saw a woman shot in the stomach by a stray bullet and her little girl, also wounded, walking the streets of Zacatecas two days after the battle without medical attention.

From Juarez I went by auto to El Paso, Tex., where I met all the newspaper men on the border, who evinced great interest in such of my experiences as I related. Then I boarded a train for home, thank God. My adventure in Mexico was over. I was as happy as a boy going to the circus for the first time. I was going to see the white lights of Broadway again, after all.

UNCLE SAM GOT HIS CENT.

Threatened Prosecution if Ex-Postmaster Didn't Meet "Shortage."

Luther H. Clifton, for seventeen years postmaster at Blades, Del., received word from the postoffice department in Washington that he would be prosecuted if he did not pay a shortage of one cent. He settled and escaped trouble.

The affair was peculiar. Clifton was succeeded as postmaster last November by Caleb R. Cannon. The account was given over by an expert when the transfer was made, but it was impossible to learn the amount of cancellations, this being the basis upon which the postmaster's salary is fixed. The report of the expert finally was that the government owed the retiring official 1 cent. Later, however, the department sent word that the debt was the other way about and threatened prosecution for nonpayment. Clifton paid the money to his successor and got a receipt.

Lily Irvine Flies Seventy Miles Over Water in Sixty Minutes.

Lily Irvine made a seventy mile flight in a hydroaeroplane from Cedar Point to Euclid Beach, O., in sixty minutes, breaking the record for this trip, made by Glenn Curtiss, and making the longest over water flight ever made by a woman.

Miss Irvine started her hydroaeroplane gliding from the beach and mounting in a spiral. Then she headed her craft directly for Cleveland. She was accompanied by a mechanic.

A strong west wind helped her to make her trip in remarkably fast time. Glenn Curtiss made the same trip in 1910 in seventy minutes.

Chicken Consomme With Rice.
Roast Ribs of Lamb, Mint Sauce.
Buttered String Beans.
Mashed Potatoes.
Artichoke Salad.
Peach Ice Cream.
Lady Fingers. Coffee.

ARTICHOKEs are a vegetable which may be used to vary the bill of fare in many appetizing forms. Jerusalem artichokes may be used as a salad or pickled. They also may be boiled in salted water and served with white sauce. Artichokes, boiled, are often served with drawn butter.

Served With Sauce.

Artichokes With Hollandaise Sauce.—Trim stalks and outside leaves of artichokes and wash; tie up tight in pieces of cotton cloth (this is to prevent leaves from falling apart while boiling); boil in plenty of water to which add some lemon juice and a pinch of baking soda; boil until tender about forty or fifty minutes. When done untie bags, partly open up the center leaves and with a spoon remove fibrous substance. Serve on napkin with butter or hollandaise sauce on side.

If artichokes are to be served as a salad let them get cold before removing fibrous substance. Serve with French dressing or vinaigrette.

Artichoke Salad.—Boil six artichokes, separate the "fonds" from the leaves and cut into small pieces. Put in a salad bowl with an equal quantity of asparagus points that have been cooked in salted water. Take a handful of salted almonds, chop them fine, pound them with the juice of two lemons and half a pint of cream, salt and pepper and pour over the salad. A little mayonnaise may be added to the salad, but it is more delicate in flavor without it.

They Are Delicious Stuffed.

Artichokes Stuffed With Chicken.—Take preserved or fresh artichoke bottoms, fill with chicken forcemeat. Put them into a saucepan with a little butter and place them in the oven to cook the forcemeat. Take them out, arrange on a dish and serve with a little beef extract poured over them.

Stuffed Artichokes.—Boil the artichokes and pull the leaves apart, but do not break from the heart. Then insert between them a dressing made as follows: Chop together some green onion, a little garlic, some grated bread, Italian cheese, red pepper, thyme, etc. Then strain each artichoke in a pan, pour over it a small bottle of olive oil, set in the oven to warm up, dipping up every bit of the oil into the artichokes.

Both Credulous.

She—"You yowed that it would be your aim to make my life naught but one of happiness. And to think that I believed you!" He—"That's nothing! I believed it at the time myself."

Great charm bath tea, some fragrant blend Sipped with a fair and festive friend.

And even milk bath flavor too When sun kissed milkmaids hand it you.

Beer in a large resounding can Belongs to a coarser type of man.

While others rejoice in spirit pure And others in a faded liqueur.

But none of these nor any wine Hath present claim to praise of mine.

Hath ever produced the gasp and thrill Of that incomparable swill

CARBAJAL A DANDY AND LIVES LIKE A CROESUS.

Huerta's Successor Courtied but Lost Mexico's Prize Beauty.

Interesting sidelights on Francisco Carbaljal, the new provisional president of Mexico, are given in the New York Times. Says the writer:

Carbaljal is a tall man, thin and of fine figure. Unlike so many Mexicans, he is fair in complexion. He is irreproachably fashionable in dress and may be seen at all hours of the day in the latest style of cutaway and a high hat. He has the genuine Spanish courtliness of manner, and his charm and wit make him a great lion in society at the Mexican capital.

Carbaljal is unmarried. Once he was engaged to Senorita Rosario Gonzalez de Castilla of Vera Cruz, who was adjudged in a beauty contest the most beautiful woman in Mexico, but she married somebody else.

The provisional president has two fine houses in Mexico City. He lives in splendid style, keeps automobiles and carriages and a whole retinue of servants and entertains his friends at all sorts of brilliant functions.

But, gay as is his life in the city, one of his principal pleasures in life is to take a jaunt into the country districts, accompanied by a group of friends.

He is passionately fond of music, and his name is always among the first on the list of subscribers to boxes when grand opera companies visit Mexico City.

He plays billiards and chess excellently. It is billiards that Carbaljal plays, not pool. Mexicans, like most other Latins, scorn the latter game.

Carbaljal is an eloquent orator, a quality which helped him immeasurably in pleading cases as a lawyer. In addition he writes well, having produced some able pamphlets dealing chiefly with projects of reform.

He is a member of some of the leading scientific and literary societies of the republic.

Elegant Blouses in Voile and Organdy

ONE of the handsomest of the many beautiful lingerie blouses which have added so much to the beauty of apparel this summer, is very clearly pictured here. It is made of fine organdy and depends for its effectiveness upon the fineness of the fabric and the faultlessness of the work as well as upon a fine choice of lace and embroidery used in decorating.

The upper part of the blouse is cut in kimono fashion from a piece of the organdy tucked in squares, in panels an eighth of an inch wide. A tuck is set in at the back and front of the plain organdy. Cluny lace edging or some other equally good lace, is used in setting in these panels. The lower part of the blouse back and front is of the plain fabric.

The sleeves are finished with a band of the plain organdy to which a net trim is attached by a fine line of hemstitching.

Whenever the plain organdy is used a dainty design in hand embroidery adorns it. The collar is finished with small embroidered scallops and the flower design, appearing on the waist elsewhere, is repeated here. The collar is wired with the finest of wire to support it at the back.

A waist cut on somewhat similar lines and made of figured voile is shown in the second picture. In this model all seams are joined with a piping of cord covered with the material. There is a vest of plain white net and a collar of net and lace. Pearl buttons fasten the vest and small bows of satin, matching the flower in the voile, add a pretty color note and a smart finish.

Both these models are finished at the waist line with a narrow belt which sets under the skirt. There is very little work on the blouse of voile but the daintiness of the fabric, showing lavender flowers on a white ground and the fineness of the plain net in vest and collar, produce an effect of elegance almost equal to that in the elaborate blouse of organdy.

Training Outweighs Long Service

There is no better proof of this than the every-day scenes of long service, untrained employees at the beck and call of younger men who occupy the big positions because of their training. It's a case of Training vs. Long Service—with the odds in favor of the trained man. Get out of the untrained rut. Mark and mail the attached coupon and let the I. C. S., of Scranton, tell how you can qualify for a better position. How you can protect yourself against servitude in your old age. How you can become an expert at your chosen line of work.

That the business of the I. C. S. is to Raise Salaries is shown by the monthly average of 400 letters voluntarily written by students reporting salaries raised and advancement won through I. C. S. help. No necessity for leaving home. No books to buy. Marking the coupon puts you to no expense and places you under no obligation. Mark it NOW.

The Adventures of Kathlyn

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

Illustrated by Pictures from the Moving Picture Production of the Selig Polyscope Co.

After dinner that night the colonel went the rounds, as was his habit nightly. By and by he returned to the bungalow, but did not enter. He filled his cutty and walked to and fro in the moonlight, with his head bent and his hands clasped behind his back. There was a restlessness in his stride not unlike that of the captive beasts in the cages nearby. Occasionally he paused at the clink clink of the elephant irons or at the "wuff" as the uneasy pacer poured dust on his head.

"Bah! It was madness. A parchment in Hindustani, given jestingly or ironically by a humorous old chap in orders and white linen and rhinoceros sandals. A throne! Pshaw! It was bally nonsense. As if a white man could rule over a brown one by the choice of the latter! And yet, that man Umballa's face, when he had shown the king the portraits of his two lovely daughters! He would send Ahmed. Ahmed knew the business as well as he did. He would send his abdication to the council, giving them the right to choose his successor. He himself would remain home with the girls. Then he gazed up at the moon and smiled grimly.

"Hukum hai!" he murmured in Hindustani. "It is the orders. I've simply got to go. When I recall those rubies and emeralds and pearls. Well, it's not cupid for myself. It's for the girls. Besides, there's the call, the adventure. I've simply got to go. I can't escape it. I must be always on the go. . . . since she died."

A few days later he stood again before the desk in the living room. He was dressed for travel. He sat down and penned a note. From the box which contained the order he extracted a large envelope, heavily sealed. This he balanced in his hand for a moment, frowned, laughed, and swore softly. He would abdicate, but at a snuffbox and a diamond ring. He was an old fool. Into a still larger envelope he put the sealed envelope and his own letter. He was blotting it as his daughters entered.

"Come here, my pretty cubs." He held out the envelope. "I want you, Kit, to open this on December 31, at midnight. Girls like mysteries, and if you opened it any time but midnight it wouldn't be mysterious. Indeed, I shall probably have you both on the arms of my chair when you open it."

"Is it about the money?" asked Winnie. "No, George, Kit, the child is beginning to reason out things," he jestingly replied. "Winnie laughed, and so did Kathlyn, but she did so because occultly she felt that her father expected her to laugh. She was positively uncanny sometimes in her perspicacity.

"On December 31, at midnight," she repeated. "All right, father. You must write to us at least once every fortnight."

"I'll cable from Singapore, from Ceylon, and write a long letter from Alahia. Come on. We must be off. Ahmed is waiting."

Some hours later the two girls saw the Pacific Mail steamer move with cold and insolent majesty out toward the Golden Gate. Kathlyn proved rather uncommunicative on the way home. December 31 kept running through her mind. It held a portent of evil. She knew something of the Orient, though she had never visited India. Had her father made an implacable enemy? Was he going into some unknown, unseen danger? December 31, at midnight. Could she hold her curiosity in check that long?

Umballa Leaving California.

Many of the days that followed dragged, many flew—the first for Kathlyn, the last for Winnie, who now had a beau, a young newspaper man from San Francisco. He came out regularly every Saturday and returned at night. Winnie became, if anything, more flighty than ever. Her father never had young men about. The men he generally gathered round his board were old hunters or sailors. Kathlyn watched this budding romance amusedly. The young man was very nice. But her thoughts were always and eternally with her father.

During the last week in December there arrived at the Palace hotel in San Francisco an East Indian, tall, well formed, rather handsome. Except for his brown turban he would have passed unnoticed. For Hindus and Japanese and Chinamen and what nots from the southern seas were every day affairs. The brown turban, however, and an enormous emerald on one of his fingers, produced an effect quite gratifying to him. Vanily in the oriental is never conspicuous for its absence. The reporters gave him scant attention, though, for this was at a time when the Gaekwar of Baroda was unknown.

The stranger, after two or three days of idling, casually asked the way to the wild animal farm of his old friend, Colonel Hare. It was easy enough to find. At the village inn he was treated with tolerant contempt. These brown fellows were forever coming and going, to and fro, from the colonel's celebrated farm.

At five o'clock in the afternoon of the 31st day of December, this East Indian peered cautiously into the French window of the Hare bungalow. The picture he saw there sent a thrill into his heart. She was as fair and beautiful as an hour of Saadi. She sat at a desk, holding a long, white envelope in her hand. By and by she put it away, and he was particularly to note the drawer in which she placed it. That the dark-haired girl at the tea table was equally charming did not stir the watcher. Dark haired women were plentiful in his native land. Yonder was the girl of the photograph, the likeness of which had fired his heart for many a day. With the patience of the oriental he stood in the shadow and waited. Sooner or later they would leave the room, and sooner or later, with the deftness of his breed, he would enter. The leopard he had heard about was nowhere to be seen.

"Winnie," said Kathlyn, "I read it." Winnie set down the teacup, her eyes brimming.

"What can it all mean? Not a line from father since Colombo, five months ago." "Do you think?"

"No, not," replied Kathlyn, hastily. "Father sometimes forgets. He may be hunting miles from telegraph wires and railroads; it is only that he should forget us so long. Who knows? He may have dropped down into Borneo. He wanted some pythons, so I heard him say."

The elder sister did not care to instill into the heart of her charge the fear which was in her own.

"Who knows but there may be good news in the envelope? Dad's always doing something like that. New Year's collie, released from the kitchen, came bounding in. In his exuberance he knocked over a cloisonne vase. Both girls were glad to welcome this diversion. They rose simultaneously and gave chase. The dog headed for the outdoor studio, where they caught him and made believe they were punishing him.

Quietly the watcher entered through the window, alert and tense. He flew to the desk, found the envelope, steamed it open at the kettle, extracted the sealed envelope and Colonel Hare's note. He smiled as he read the latter and changed his plans completely. He would not play messenger; he would use a lure instead. With his ear strained for sounds, he wrote and substituted a note. This hour of Saadi would not pause to note the difference in writing; the vitalness of the subject would enchain her thoughts. It was all accomplished in the space of a few minutes. Smiling, he passed out into the fast settling twilight.

They were shipping a lion to San Francisco, and the roaring and confusion were all very satisfactory to the trespasser.

Midnight. From afar came the mellow notes of the bells in the ancient Spanish mission. The old year was dead, the new year was born, carrying with it the unchanging sound of happiness and misery, or promises made and promises broken, of good and evil.

"The packet!" cried Winnie. Kathlyn recognized in that call that Winnie was only a child. All the responsibility lay upon her shoulders. She ripped the cover from the packet and read the note.

"Kathlyn: If not heard from I'm held captive in Alahia. Sealed document can save me. Bring it yourself to Alahia by first steamer. FATHER."

"I knew it," said Kathlyn, calmly. The fear in her heart had, as the brown man had anticipated, blinded her to the fact that this was not her father's characteristic blunt scrawl.

"Oh, Kit, Kit!" "Hush, Winnie! I must go, and go alone. Where's the evening paper? Ah, here it is. Let me see what boat leaves San Francisco tomorrow. The Empress of India, 6 a. m. I must make that. Now, you're your father's daughter, too, Winnie. You must stay behind and be brave and wait. I shall come back. I shall find father, if I have to rouse all India. Now, to pack."

When they arrived at the station the passenger train had just drawn out. For a while Kathlyn felt beaten. She would be compelled to wait another week. It was disheartening.

"Why not try the freight, then?" cried Winnie. "You little angel! I never thought of that!" But the crew would not hear of it.

It was absolutely against the company's rules. Kathlyn could have cried.

"It isn't money, miss, it's the rules," said the conductor, kindly. "I can't do it."

Kathlyn turned in despair toward the station. It was then she saw the boxed lion on the platform. She returned to the conductor of the freight.

"Why isn't that lion shipped?" "We can't carry a lion without an attendant, Miss. You ought to know that."

"Very well," replied Kathlyn. She smiled at the conductor confidently. "I'll travel as the lion's attendant. You certainly cannot object to that."

"I guess you've got me," admitted the conductor. "But where the dickens will we put the cat? Every car is closed and locked, and there is not an empty car."

"You can easily get the lion in the caboose. I'll see that he doesn't bother any one."

"Lions in the caboose is a new one on me. Well, you know your dad's business better than I do. Look alive, boys, and get that angora aboard. This is Miss Hare herself, and she'll take charge."

"Kit, Kit!" "Winnie!" "O, I'll be brave. I've just got to be. But I've never been left alone before."

The two girls embraced, and Winnie went sobbing back to the maid who waited on the platform.

What happened in that particular caboose has long since been newspaper history. The crew will go on telling it till it becomes as fabulous as one of Sindbad's yarns. How the lion escaped, how the fearless young woman captured it alone, unaided, may be found in the files of all metropolitan newspapers. Of the brown man who was found hiding in the coat closet of the caboose nothing was said. But the sight of him dismayed Kathlyn as no lion could have done. Any dark-skinned person was now a subtle menace. And when, later, she saw him peering into the porthole of her stateroom, dismay became terror.

Who was this man?

CHAPTER II.

The Unwelcome Throne.

Kathlyn sensed great loneliness when, about a month later, she arrived at the basin in Calcutta. A thousand or more natives were bathing ceremoniously in the ghat—men, women, and children. It was early morning, and they were making solemn genuflections toward the bright sun. The water front swarmed with brown bodies, and great wheeled carts drawn by sad-eyed bullocks threaded slowly through the maze. The many white turbans, stirring hither and thither, reminded her of a field of white poppies in a breeze. India! There it lay, ready for her eager feet. Always had she dreamed about it, and romanced over it, and sought it on the wings of her spirit. Yonder it lay, ancient as China, enchanting as storied Persia.

If only she were on pleasure bent! If only she knew some one in this great teeming city! She knew no one; she carried no letters of introduction, no letters of credit, nothing but the gold and notes the paymaster at the farm had hastily turned over to her. Only by constant application to maps and guide books had she managed to arrange the short cut to the far kingdom. She had been warned that it was a wild and turbulent place, out of the beaten path, beyond the reach of iron rails. Three long sea voyages: across the Pacific (which wasn't), down the bitter Yellow sea, up the blue Bay of Bengal, with many a sea change and many a strange picture. What though her heart ached, it was impossible that her young eyes should not absorb all she saw and marvel over it. India!

The strange, elusive Hindu had disappeared after Hongkong. That was a weight off her soul. She was now assured that her imagination had beguiled her. How should he know anything about her? What was more natural than that he should wish to hurry back to his native state? She was not the only one in a hurry. And there were Hindus of all castes on all three ships. By now she had almost forgotten him.

There was one bright recollection to break the unending loneliness. Coming down from Hongkong to Singapore she had met at the captain's table a young man by the name of Bruce. He was a quiet, rather untalkative man, lean and sinewy, sun and wind bitten. Kathlyn had as yet had no sentimental affairs. Absorbed in her work, her father, and the care of Winnie, such young men as she had met had scarcely interested her. She had only tolerant contempt for idlers, and these young men had belonged to that category. Bruce caught her interest in the very fact that he had but little to say and said that crisply and well. There was something authoritative in the shape of his mouth and the steadiness of his eye, though before her he never exercised this power. A dozen times she had been on the point of taking him into her confidence, but the irony of fate had always firmly closed her lips.

And now, waiting for the ship to warp into its pier, she realized what a fatal mistake her reticence had been. A friend of her father!

Bruce had left the Lloyder before dinner (at Singapore), and as Kathlyn's British-India coaster did not leave till morning she had elected to remain over night on the German boat.

As Bruce disappeared among the disembarking passengers and climbed into a rickshaw she turned to the captain, who stood beside her.

"Do you know Mr. Bruce?" "Very well," said the German. "Didn't he tell you who he is? No? Ah! Why, Mr. Bruce is a great hunter. He has shot everything, written books, climbed the Himalayas. Only last year he brought me the sack of a musk deer, and that is the most dangerous of all sports. He collects animals."

Then Kathlyn knew. The name had been vaguely familiar, but the young man's reticence had given her no opportunity to dig into her recollection. Bruce! How many times her father had spoken of him! What a fool she had been! Bruce knew the country she was going to, perhaps as well as her father; and he could have simplified her journey to the last word. Well, what was done could not be recalled and done over.

"My father is a great hunter, too," she said simply, eyeing wistfully the road taken by Bruce into town.

"What? Herr Gott! Are you Colonel Hare's daughter?" exclaimed the captain.

"Yes." "He seized her by the shoulders. 'Why did you not tell me? Why, Colonel Hare and I have smoked many a Burma cheroot together on these waters. Herr Gott! And you never said anything! What a woman for a man to marry!' he laughed. 'You have sat at my table for five days, and only now I find that you are Hare's daughter! And you have a sister. Ah, yes! He was always taking out some photographs in the smoker and showing them to us old chaps.'"

Tears filled Kathlyn's eyes. In an Indian prison, out of the jurisdiction of the British Raj, and with her two small hands and woman's mind she must find him! Always the mysterious packet lay close to her heart, never for a moment was it beyond the reach of her hand. Her father's freedom! (Continued To-morrow)

Casey at the Pay Window

When mighty Casey was enjoined the town was plunged in gloom. The grand stand and the bleachers soon were lonely as a tomb. The gate receipts are absent now, the magistrates in despair. For no one cares to see a game if Casey isn't there.

But somewhere in this favored land the lights are shining bright. And Casey lingers there and gets a shine on every night. For, though they shoo him from the field and will not let him play, he doesn't care a whoop as long as Casey draws his pay. —George E. Phair in New York American.

REMARKABLE PROGRESS OF UNDERWATER CRAFT.

Jules Verne's Dream to Be Realized in Advent of Submarine Cruiser.

Underwater craft have made marked progress since those early days when the first Holland boat dived clumsily, like a rheumatic porpoise, and the first Lake boats bowled merrily along like an ocean wagon, on the smooth floor of the Atlantic between Sandy Hook and the capes of the Chesapeake. We have now a fair fleet of submarines—thirty-one of them and twenty-one building. A squadron of these inviolable lighters guards each entrance to the Panama canal. In size recent submarines approach that of small gunboats and destroyers. Great Britain has six of 1,200 tons displacement; Germany six of 1,000 tons and France two of 1,043 tons. The crew of such a boat ranges from thirty to forty men.

Thus far no nation has ventured to send its submarines out to serve on the high seas. They have been always relatively slow boats for coast defense driven by gasoline engines on the surface and by electric power when submerged. Now, however, Jules Verne's dream of the Nautilus under Captain Nemo is to be realized in the advent of the submarine cruiser, which—on the surface in peace and submerged in action—will accompany battle fleets on the oceans of the world. The British navy is the pioneer in this development. While the details are carefully guarded, the general view of naval experts is that the protected vessels are to be of about 1,500 tons displacement and twenty-one knots surface speed and that they will be fitted with five or six torpedo tubes for underwater attack and two 12-pounder guns for repelling aerial craft. The submerged battle speed of these vessels should not be less than fifteen knots. Our navy department is meeting this advance in the project of an experimental seagoing submarine, for which the naval appropriation bill carries an appropriation of $1,100,000. The chief difficulty to be met is that of underwater driving at the high speed demanded. Electric propulsion, owing to the bulk and weight of the necessary storage batteries, may have to be abandoned.

Development, if successfully effected, foreshadows another radical change—the disappearance of the torpedo boat destroyer, which the submarine cruiser when in action on the surface should replace. In future naval actions the combatant vessels would then be battleships on the surface, submarine cruisers below it and aeroplanes and dirigibles above, in which the chief enemies of the submarines would be the aerial cruisers. From his height the aviator can readily detect submerged bodies owing to their freedom from the effect of reflected light at the surface of the water.

Use for Lily Leaves.
A powder made from the leaves of water lilies is successful in making various fabrics waterproof. The inventor of the powder noticing that water was not absorbed when it fell on the leaves, but slid off, conceived the idea that the same substance which made the lily leaf waterproof might be used in connection with fabrics. The powder from the leaves is mixed with water, and the process consists in immersing the fabric in this mixture.

PETER OF SERVA.
Ruler of Servia, Who Faces War
With Austria.

GERMANS FIRED ON

Russian Cossacks Shoot Across Frontier at Officers.
Eydtkuhnen, Germany, July 28.—Shots were fired by a Cossack patrol across the German frontier on the alleged ground that an attempt was being made to cross the border at a wrong place.
Germans say that the group fired upon by the Russians were army officers. Much feeling has been caused by the incident.

FIGHTING REPORTED

It is Said Austrians Crossed Border and Drove Servians Before Them.
Vienna, July 28.—The Militarische Rundschau repeats the report that the Servians have blown up the bridge across the Save between Semlin and Belgrade.
The explosives were laid before the Servian officials left Belgrade and were discharged by an electric switch in the Servian capital.
It is also reported that Servia has withdrawn her troops from the Albanian frontier and strong detachments are concentrating on the Brine frontier.
Other unconfirmed reports are that the Austrians invaded Servia at Nitrovia and drove the Servians before them and that the Austrian Danube flotilla seized two Servian steamers and made their occupants prisoners.
Montenegro is reported to have mobilized her troops, with great activity in the neighborhood of Cattaro.

Russia Regards War Inevitable.

Washington, July 28.—How ominous is the situation in Europe was indicated in an authoritative dispatch received in Washington from St. Petersburg. According to this reliable information the Russian ministry regards war between Russia and Austria as inevitable. This opinion is shared in all diplomatic and political circles in the Russian capital. It was further made known that Russia has ordered a complete mobilization of all her forces.

WAR ROW ENDS IN KILLING

Argument Over European Tangle Leads to Murder in Indianapolis.
Indianapolis, July 28.—Argument over the war situation in Europe is believed to have been the cause of the killing of George Wise, an Austrian, by Tom Dorak, also an Austrian.
Dorak is under arrest. There is much excitement in the foreign quarter, and the police fear there will be many fights.
There are about 500 Servians and nearly as many Austrians in Indianapolis, and a number already have made preparations to return to their native countries.

GREECE TO AID SERVA

100,000 Troops Promised If Austria Begins War.
Constantinople, July 28.—Greece will send 100,000 troops to the aid of Servia in case Austria forces war on that kingdom, the Greek minister here stated.
The Turkish government has issued a statement of neutrality, but in the event of war many believe Turkey would soon become involved in an effort to regain some of the territory she lost as a result of the Balkan war.

Forty-Day Fast Fatal.

Chambersburg, Pa., July 28.—James Fitzpatrick died here after a forty-day fast. He was employed on the county farm for years. On June 16 he began the fatal fast, drinking nothing but small quantities of water and coffee. He ended the fast on July 29, greatly weakened. He was unmarried. Although given nourishment consistently, he grew weaker until his death came.

As Poor Richard Says.
A penny saved is two pence clear, a pin a day is a groat a year. Save and have.

RECALL TROOPS FROM DUBLIN

Police Official Who Called For Military Suspended.

MORE TROUBLE IS FEARED

Rival Factions Riot In the Streets of City—Sixteen Constables Arrested, But Refuse to Stay In Barracks.

Dublin, July 28.—Following demands made by the lord mayor of Dublin the King's Own Scottish Borderers, the troops who fired upon a throng of Irish Nationalists, killing four and wounding nearly two score, were ordered to Carragh, and the assistant commissioner of police, who requisitioned the military force without authority, was suspended from duty pending an inquiry.

Sixteen constables refused to assist in the arrest of gun runners, who were the cause of the clash. They were placed under arrest and sent to the barracks, with orders to remain there. This they refused to do.

Rioting broke out again last evening. There were many clashes in the streets between the rival factions. The excitement throughout the city was intense, and it is feared that the situation may grow worse.

The order to the troops to leave Dublin it was hoped would in a measure pacify the people and prevent a possible attack upon them.

The authorities are making no search for the Nationalists' rifles, the landing of which led to the clash. It was learned that they were buried in the gardens of villas along the bay but were dug up during the night and conveyed to a secret depot. It is probable that no further attempt will be made to seize the weapons.

Following the lord mayor's demand the Scottish Borderers were ordered confined in the barracks. At the same time orders were issued to confine to their barracks at New Rye the Duke of Cornwall's regiment.

Women and children mowed down by bullets of the king's Scottish soldiers in Dublin, two women and two men dead, with scores injured—that is the tragic story of the first clash in what is now feared will be civil war over the question of the exclusion of Ulster from the provisions of the home rule bill.

TALK HANGING IN COMMONS

Assistant Police Commissioner of Dublin Blamed For Fatal Clash.

London, July 28.—Information as to the "shocking occurrence in Dublin," as John E. Redmond, the Irish Nationalist leader, put it, was demanded immediately after the opening of the session of the house of commons.

Mr. Redmond was dissatisfied with the meager information given him that he moved the adjournment of the house in order to debate the matter.

Augustine Birrell, chief secretary for Ireland, threw the blame for Sunday's conflict between the troops and the public on the assistant police commissioner, who, he said, had requisitioned the military entirely on his own responsibility. The official consequently has been suspended while an inquiry was made.

The Nationalist members shouted: "He ought to be hanged."

Mr. Birrell said the major in command of the detachment of the King's Own Scottish Borderers had denied that he gave orders to fire on the people.

"He ought to be hanged," shouted William Redmond.

"The ministers ought to be hanged," added Lord Robert Cecil.

Mr. Birrell said the soldiers became exasperated after several of them had received severe injuries. The officers stopped the firing immediately, but four persons had already been killed and thirty-two injured. He added that there would be a full inquiry immediately.

TRIES TO WIPE OUT FAMILY

Boston Court Clerk Kills Daughter and Wounds Wife and Son.

Boston, July 28.—Thomas H. Dalton, clerk of the East Boston district court, shot and killed his five-weeks old daughter Priscilla, seriously wounded his wife and his son Joseph five years old, and then killed himself.

Dalton had been at his home for the past two months, suffering from a nervous breakdown. The boy is in a critical condition, but it is expected that Mrs. Dalton will recover. Dalton shot the children as they slept.

An Instrument of Providence

By WILLARD BLAKEMAN

I was walking on the beach, watching the waves come rolling in before a gale and throwing up driftwood. When a bottle was tossed at my feet. I extracted a paper from it on which was written:

We are going to pieces. Whoever gets this go to Norman D. Carlisle and tell him he will find my will in my desk in secret drawer.

This was all—no date, no signature, no address as to where Norman D. Carlisle would be found.

That night I went to bed thinking about the message. Suppose it was genuine. Somebody was enjoying property that belonged to another. But it seemed to me that if it were genuine the writer would have given at least the city in which the person for whom it was intended lived. If the perpetrator was doing the thing for sport or to pass the time or because he hadn't any more sense he would have given it. And yet perhaps that's just what he wouldn't do. He might not like to particularize. On the other hand, a man who is about to be dumped into a roaring ocean might leave something out that he should have put in.

I was impelled to find Norman D. Carlisle. I didn't wish to engage in looking for a needle in a haystack, but I couldn't resist the feeling that it was my bounden duty to do so. There were then some 80,000,000 people in the United States alone. The name was Anglo-Saxon, and the person might be somewhere in the great British countries. Nevertheless when I found that I couldn't let the matter alone I went into it methodically.

I put a personal advertisement in one newspaper in every city in the United States, whose inhabitants numbered 500,000 or over for the said Norman D. Carlisle. I received several replies signed Norman D. Carlisle, the middle name usually differing. I wrote each of them, asking if he had lost a relative at sea, but they all answered in the negative—that is, so far as they knew.

After six months I put in another advertisement for Mr. Carlisle and received a reply from a Norman D. Carlisle living in a town of about 50,000 people. He had seen the ad. while in the city where it had been inserted. I asked him if he had lost a relative at sea, and he replied "No." I dropped the matter so far as he was concerned, but later he wrote me that he was a lawyer and had had a client who had sailed from Rio de Janeiro in a vessel that was catalogued among missing ships.

After some correspondence he sent me a check for expenses, and I went to see him. He made an engagement for me to meet a lady in his office, and I was introduced to Miss Edith Parks, twenty-one years old and comely. She appeared to be a lady, but was shabbily dressed. I was informed that her uncle had been lost on the missing vessel from Rio. I brought out the paper I had found, which I had carefully kept, and as soon as she saw it she said she believed that it had been written by her uncle. Some of his letters were produced, and all doubt was removed. The message, though scrawled hastily in a trembling hand, was found to correspond with the uncle's writing.

I was then told that Miss Parks had been brought up by this uncle, who was wealthy, he being unmarried and without children. After he had been declared legally dead the courts had set about administering his estate and had already found forty persons who were heirs at law.

Since Mr. Weatherby, the man who had been shipwrecked, had given Miss Parks to understand that she was to be his heir it was likely that the will mentioned in the message gave his property to her. But the desk—where was it? Mr. Weatherby's furniture had been sold a year before. Who had bought the desk? No one could tell.

Since I had gone so far in the matter I did not propose to be beaten now. Advertising having availed, I advertised for the person who had bought a desk at a sale of the effects of Cyrus Weatherby. In due time I received a reply from the purchaser. I wrote him that a niece of the deceased wished to redeem it and asked him to fix a price. He said he would sell it for $100. Miss Parks had no money to pay for it, so I mailed the man a check for the amount. The desk was sent to me, and, taking it into a cellar, I chopped it into kindling wood. Among the rubbish lay the papers in a secret drawer, and, taking this up, I found one marked "Last Will and Testament of Cyrus Blake Weatherby." I read it and found that he left all his property to his beloved niece Edith Parks.

to his beloved niece Edith Parks. That same evening I called on Miss Parks with the will that changed her condition from poverty to wealth. She sat like a statue staring at the paper as though she were looking through it rather than at it. I asked her what she was thinking about, but she did not hear me. I repeated the question, and, apparently awakening from a dream, she said:

"It doesn't seem possible that uncle about to die on a boundless ocean, too wrought upon to give my address could have reached me among the millions of people of the earth."

I did not tell her so, but she soon came to recognize me as the instrument chosen by Providence to find her. After awhile she rewarded me by giving me herself.

FURTHER HONOR MEMORY OF VON STEUBEN, WAR HERO.

Statue at Utica, N. Y., Another Testimonial of American Appreciation.

A statue of Baron Friedrich Wilhelm Augustus Henry von Steuben to be dedicated at Utica, N. Y., Aug. 2, will add further honor to the memory of the famous foreign soldier who helped the American colonies in their hour of need.

Von Steuben, who has been described as "the drill master of the Revolution," is buried near Utica, on the estate presented to him by congress. He wrote the drill regulations for the Continental army and had much to do with the organization of the forces.

At the Utica ceremonies, which will be marked by a pageant Aug. 5, 6 and 7, members of the German-American alliance will wear the Continental uniform and carry flintlocks in the pageant battle of Oriskany, and they will represent the German Palatines following General Herkimer to defeat the British.

General von Steuben was a lieutenant general in the Prussian army during the Seven Years' war. He came to America on his own responsibility and spent his fortune in making soldiers out of the colonists of New York, who had left the city for New Jersey after the victories of Lord Cornwallis had given possession of the metropolis to the British. His manual of instruction for the army was adopted by congress in 1779. He introduced the strictest discipline, a change greatly needed by the army, and which contributed to its ultimate success. He served throughout the war, and his conduct was marked by the utmost valor. He frequently shared his last dollar with the suffering soldiers, as he often did his clothing and camp equipments also.

At the close of the war the State of New Jersey gave him a farm, New York State gave him 16,000 acres of wild land in Oneida county, and the government granted him an annuity of $2,500. He distributed his lands among his aids, his servants and tenants.

In Dec. 7, 1910, a monument to the baron was erected in Washington. Fifty thousand dollars was appropriated for the purpose by congress. A replica of this monument was sent to Germany in 1911.

"LITTLE PANAMA'S" OPENING.

Cape Cod Canal Ordered Built by Washington 139 Years Ago.

Interesting in connection with the opening of the Cape Cod canal is the fact that the event carries out an order given by George Washington in 1775. The new waterway, which is eight miles long, connects Buzzards bay and Cape Cod bay and will shorten distances and provide a safer route for 25,000 sea craft a year which now sail around Cape Cod. It will make an island of the hook shaped cape where the pilgrims first landed.

The canal cost $12,000,000, and it shortens the present dangerous route. Back in 1775 George Washington as commander in chief issued an order: "Excavate as speedily as consistent a passage across Cape Cod from Barnstable to Monument bay to give us greater security in navigation and more advantage over the enemy."

The route suggested by Washington is practically the one followed by the new canal.

Two raids made in Cincinnati by the police disclosed the fact that several women past the age of three score and ten have daily been playing the races.

A man who gave a ten cent tip was fined $3 and a negro porter who took the tip was fined a like amount at Jackson, Miss., under the state anti-tipping statute.

Autopsy on James McLaughlin of Dutchess Junction, N. Y., revealed that McLaughlin's heart was on his right side.

In New York Mrs. Maria Bollee sued Miss Anna Bolker for $500 damages because the latter revealed that Mrs. Bollee wore a wig.

Laura Jean Libbey's Talks on Heart Topics

THE BUSINESS GIRL'S HOPES.

Hope makes one confident and gay; Clouds at her bidding disappear. Points she to aught, the bliss draws near. And fancy smooths the way.

It is not every young woman who considers that marriage is the jumping-off place of satisfied ambition and hope. There are girls of a thoughtful turn of mind who consider it praiseworthy to fit themselves for some special duty in this work-a-day world. When a young woman knows that she has no one to look to for support, she realizes that she must buckle on the armor and face the situation not only bravely but eagerly. Those who must earn their own living look with wonder upon the weaklings who shrink from honest labor.

They pity the poor creatures who sit with folded hands in a home that is in imminent danger of being disrupted each time rent day rolls around, waiting for some man to come along, fall in love with them and marry them.

They never know what it is to have a penny of their own in their pocket, and must bow submissive to the whims of the head of the house no matter how bitter their hearts may rebel in secret.

The business girl knows no such dependence. She earns her own way in the world and if she finds one roof inhospitable, its inmates uncongenial, she may go elsewhere. She sensibly puts heart and soul into her work, mastering all of the intricacies of her business that her services may be more valuable to her employers as time rolls on.

She acquires the habit of dressing neatly, with judgment, and not conspicuously. She does not twine roses in her hair during business hours, causing the wife of the head of the firm to dislike her.

Neither does she wear filmy lace waists and high French heels to business to create gossip among her associates. Her plain shirt-waist is scrupulously neat and plain. Her cloth skirt is not cut too loose at the hip and too tight at the feet. Her shoes are of the common-sense, walking type. She makes a study of her duties, and is faithful in the performance of them. She doesn't gossip about business secrets. She knows the value of a pleasant smile and minding her own business. She asks no favor of those about her and accepts none at their hands. She realizes above all that a good disposition is a business girl's asset. She takes no notice of a slight here or a word of sarcasm there, knowing that into each life some rain must fall. Her tastes are simple and her wants but few. She has the good judgment to lay by each week a little for the inevitable rainy day. She learns to be a student of human nature and chooses her friends wisely. It is never the top nor the ne'er-do-well who is attracted toward her. It is the man of good judgment who recognizes a true womanly woman when he finds one. The business girl makes the best kind of wife and mother. The popularity of the business girl is apparent when it is conceded that the greatest men in law and letters, men of great wealth, and in the highest walks of life, have chosen them for wives.

Development of Oil Wells.

Instead of exploding nitroglycerine in the recesses of the earth to increase the flow of oil wells a more recent method has been employed by compressed air. The compressed air is used upon the theory that if the original rock pressure is put back upon the rock the flow of oil through it will be held constant or greatly increased. Thus, as the oil is exhausted, the lost pressure is continuously restored by pumping vast quantities of air down into the inner earth. The new method has been so successfully worked as to give promise of general adoption throughout the oil fields of the country.

What Causes Twilight.

Owing to the fact that the earth has an atmosphere, daylight does not disappear whenever the sun sinks below the horizon. The rays of the sun still strike the upper regions of our atmosphere, and thus we have twilight and the gradual darkening of the sky and disappearance of daylight.

A Few Strong Points In IHC Hopper-Cooler Engines

All the working parts on International Harvester hopper-cooled engines are located on the right hand side, for convenience in inspecting, oiling and cleaning. All parts are numbered and are easily removable. In case of accident, you need only notify the dealer at once what numbers are needed, and he will supply duplicate parts that will fit just the same as the original parts.

The cylinder is cast from a special quality of close grained gray iron. The walls are so thick that the bore may be re-ground several times to keep the cylinder true all the years the engine lasts. There are no valve pockets in this cylinder to absorb heat and sap the power. The water jacket is cast in one piece with the cylinder and allowance is made for a sufficient supply of water, especially around the valves.

These points make economy in operating an I. H. C. Hopper-Cooler engine. You don't want to lose any time on account of repairs or replacements, and an I. H. C. engine gives you pretty nearly in that ideal condition. Be sure and see the I. H. C. dealer. Write for a catalogue or get one from the dealer.
